

Text alternative to video: Figure out what to write about by using a reversed search table

Meet Robin.

Robin is about to write an assignment, but Robin doesn't really know what Robin should write about.

Robin really doesn't know what Robin should write about.

Then Robin starts to think about something.

It was something said by the librarian. The library talked about search tables. Maybe they could help?

Perhaps a search table could be used to figure out what to write about?

Robin likes floor panels.

Robin puts floor panels in the first column.

Robin finds the transport of floor panels especially interesting.

Robin puts transport in the second column.

Robin needs something in the last column, too.

Sustainability! Sustainability is important to Robin.

Robin puts sustainable in the last column.

Now, Robin knows what he might write about:

Sustainable transport of floor panels!

Robin uses the words from his search table and looks them up online.

What has been written about this before?

Thank you for reading this. Feel free to drop by library should you have any questions.
